of Lieut. E. A. and Louisa H. Canby, aged 5 years and 8 months.

At Aux Cayes, St. Domingo, on the 6th Nov., 1845, William Dras, Colonel of Marines, a native of Charleston, St. C, but for the last twenty years a resident of that place. He was buried with national military honors, his funeral being attended by all the governmental officers, citizens and distinguished foreigners at that place.

At Buenos Ayres, on the 28th of November lest, after a short but painful illness, aged 63, Thomas Gronor Love, Etq., native of London, and for the last 25 years a resident of Buenos Ayres His remains were conveyed, on the 30th, to the British Cemetery, accompanied by a large concourse of friends.

The Gaseta of the 29th November, pays the following jn. tribute to the memory of the deceased:

"OBITUARY."

With feelings of the deepst regret we announce the demise of Thomas George Love, Esq., native of England, for a vary years a resident in this country, and editor of the British Packet—which m lancholy event took place ye. terday.

Mr. Love was lughly deserving for his virtues, distinid, for h. British Packet—which m lancholy event the place ye. terday. Mr. Love was highly deserving for his virtues, distinished for his ac., mirements, and in an eminent degree orthy of esteem in the eyes of Orientalists and Argeness for the honorable slaterest he uniformly took in dedding in his able jou. The pustice of the cause of see Republics, and that of the rightly-understood intests and true honor of G. eat Britain.

The memory of this worth v and wirtuous Englishman ill ever be cherished in this country; and its citizens, mirer's and friends of noble se utiments and of merit, plore the melancholy loss of so estimables foreignor. May his spirit repose among the jast, through the infile mercy of the Almighty, is the sincere prayer we fer up on so mournful an occasion."

M 1881NG—Yesterday, Thomas Laugan left his home at the corner of 25 h street and Fourth Avonue, with a hors and waron, to go to the fort of Catherine street, since which tame he has not been heard from Information respecting will be the ukfully received by his friends at the above place.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE BY THE MAILS.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON. Passage of the Oregon Notice, in the House of Representatives, BY AN OVERWHELMING MAJORITY!

THE CRISIS IN AFFAIRS AT THE CAPITAL. CURIOUS SPEECH OF MR. ADAMS. dec. dec. dec.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9, 1846. The vote upon Lynn Boyd's substitute for the joint resolution of the Committee of Foreign Relations, dissolving the Convention of August 6, 1827. on the Oregon territory, was announced by the Speaker at twenty-five minutes after five o'clock, and stood 174 to 49. I had barely time to write down the vote, fold my letter, and place it in the hands of a passenger on board the care, as they white the passenger of the care of a mile from whizzed by me at 5 o'clock, a quarter of a mile from the depot. Whether this news by my letter reached you in advance of all your contemporaries or not, you have by this time learned, as I intended it you in advance of all your contemporaries or not, you have by this time learned, as I intended it should, and as it ought, unless the lightning line got the start of me after both reached Philadelphia, when, of course, I could not have kept up with it between there and New York.

With respect to the true intent and nature of the resolution, as it had passed the House of Representatives to day, I confess, for one, that I would rather see it go through without the proviso which qualifies it so as to render negotiation necessary, before the expiration of the twelve months. All are aware that without this clause, if the notice should be given, negotiations could still be entered into for the purpose of settling the difficulties between the two countries, on the subject of Oregon; and hence the absurdity of loading down the naked question of notice, with a rider of so silly a character. There appears to me to be a dread on the part of a large portion of the party, who advocate the rights of this country, to the whole of Oregon, to drive the question up to the sticking point; for if it was not so, the simple proposition of notice would pass without any conditions hanging on to it, which may render it nugatory altogether, when it comes to be acted upon by the President.—The transmission to the House on Saturday last, of the correspondence between Mr. Pakenham and Mr. Buchanan, may have been patriotic, candid and republican, but I look upon it as the most unwise and indiscreet step that the administration could have taken, if it wanted to secure the passage of its own measures by both Houses. From the turn that that subject took to-day, after three o'clock, when the debate closed, and the great number of amendments that were offered by menbers on every side, I could see that the disclosure of that correspondence had the effect of frightening many into a lear of war, and of cooling down that species of patriotism, which is usually forced into activity for special occasions. The country need not be alarmed about a war wi macy on both sides, settle down to 49 degrees as the line of demarkation between both countries. There is one feature, however, of this affair, which gives it a more serious aspect than what it might otherwise bear, if we were the only patties to the issue. It is, that the British government may not look upon it in the same light that we do, and take for carnest what we are only playfully doing. It is this idea that has given just cause of alarm to several prominent members of the Senate, on both sides of the question—first, to the distinguished Senators from Michigan and Ohio; and next, to the Senator from South Carolina, and his followers—all these are apprehensive of difficulties with England, and each class in its own way, are doing what they can, either to provide for the worst, or prevent the causes of a war from being matured. Both, therefore, are right in their respective views of the probable result of the passage of the resolution, but both are actuated by opposite motives. The one by a fear that the country may be taken by surprise, in an unprepared condition for repelling an enemy, should he attack us; the other, for avoiding the causes that may lead him to do it. Which of the two are the wisest, it is not for me to affirm. The country is the best judge of this, and will so judge it. Whatever motive the politicians may have had in bringing the subject forward, whether in sincerity to secure our just rights to ourselves, or as a mere electioneering scheme of operation, the great body of the people are committed to it—the nation itself is committed to it—and nothing short of national dishonor will be the consequence, it we finch from where we have taken our stand. It is only by remaining steadfast where we are, that any chance remains for an amicable ad-sequence, it we flinch from where we have taken our stand. It is only by remaining steadfast where we are, that any chance remains for an amicable adjustment of it; for England will not go to war with us, even if we insist upon the 49th parallel. She is not committed against giving us this line, but will do all she can to prevent us from making it, before she surrender the subject into our hands. Neither she nor we want war, and rather than plunge herself headlong into it, Lord Aberdeen will agree to the 49th parallel, without insisting upon any privileges south of that line. Remember this.

ARIEL. WASHINGTON, Feb. 8, 1846. The Refusal to Arbitrate-What will be the Result?

The inclemency of the weather,
The second time closed, without the prospect development. Far remote from the scene of action of renewal; they see the notice, lately regarded as of renewal; they see the notice, lately regarded as altogether pacific, and tending to hasten an adjustment, at least to give us time pending negotiation to prepare for the worst, now become not an intermediate, but perchance the last act of the drama. While the negotiation was pending, the notice could scarcely fail to produce good fruits; the negotiation being concluded, the notice may become on our part a declaration of war, to take effect at the end of a year.

Hard Research Congress and the constraint of the abundant equipments provided at the most eligible points. Our army should be moderately increased—our seaboard fortifications thoroughly repaired and furnished, and ample means should be provided for the conversion of our large merchantmen, at short notice, into sloops-of-war, properly appointed. Such preparation would be safe, sufficient, and consonant with the spirit of our institutions. We do not require a large navy, or a numerous standing army; but what we do require is to be enabled to convert quickly the materials in our possession, into the one and the other. If the means are not provided, we, whose fortunes are cast upon the sea coast, in the event of war, will be punished cruelly for our honest patriotism in standing up to the line of 54. 40.

A Direct Vote on the War Question in the Hot War or no War-Meeting of the Whige of the Senate.

In committee to-day, among the numerous at ments moved to the resolution for giving the Oregon notice, Mr. Ramsey, (whig) of Pennsylvania, moved as a provision, that the Oregon difficulties were no longer a fit subject for compromise or ne-gotiation. Tellers were ordered, and the result was ten in favor of war, and one hundred and fortywas ten in layor of war, and one hundred and fortysix against it. The ten in the affirmative and in the vocative, were—Messrs. Ramssy, Pennsylvania; Hoge, Wentworth, Douglass, R. Smith, McClernand, all of Illinois; Mr. Sawyer, of Ohio; Mr.
Yell, of Arkansas; Mr. Darrah, of Pennsylvania, and the redoubtable McConnell, of Alabama, in his

A meeting of the whigs of the Senate, (in caucus)
is called for to-morrow morning, at ten o'clock, upon the question of peace or war. We are on the very verge of the cataract.

Washington, Feb. 9, 1846.

While the day has been one of unparalleled interest in the House, the Senate has not been free from the general excitement upon the all-absorbing question of peace or war.

We shall bring up our minutes of the Senate this evening. For the present, we purpose an elucida-tion of the temper of the Senate, as exhibited to-day Mr. Westcott, on the resumption of the bill for the erection of ten war steamers, and for other purposes of putting the navy in good order, resumed his argument from Thursday last. He advocated the bill exclusively as a peace measure; and yet he con-fessed, that since the reception of the late diplomatio correspondence, the omens were dark, and significant of war. The question continuing before the Senate, and The question continuing before the Senate, and Mr. Dickinson having moved that the bill be laid informally aside, in the absence of Mr. Fairfield, Mr. Mangum insisted upon the question of postponement, on the motion of Col. Benton, of last week. Mr. Mangum was evidently aroused. His blood was up on the rejection of arbitration. He declared his unequivocal dissent to the course of the administration in this Oregon business, and his solemn opinion that there was a decided majority of the Senate opposed to the course which had been pursued in the negotiations by our Cabinet. He denounced it as a system of delusion, of mystification, and of wriggling, that was inconsistent with the interests of the country and the dignity of the government. He was just as firmly of the opinion that the administration had no idea of plunging the country into a war—but had he more confidence in the wisdom and good sense of the administration, he should have less apprehensions from the present aspect of affairs. He had nor a particle of doubt—not a particle—in the assertion that the administration to be to agitate the public mind, to bring it up to the very verge of war, in order to make political capital out of the gratitude of the people in an ultimate peaceable settlement of the difficulty. He had no objection to laying the bill upon the table; but he hoped it would never be taken up until there was more light thrown upon the subject.

Mr. Mangum was evidently indignant. His man-Mr. Dickinson having moved that the bill be laid in ken up until there was more light thrown upon the subject.

Mr. Mangum was evidently indignant. His manner was fiery and impassioned—his language stera and savage—his voice strong and sonorous—his animadversions upon the administration were as if he regarded the cabinet another French National Assembly—Mr Polk another Robespierre, and Mr. Buchanan another Anarcharsis Clootz. It was clear that the Oregon correspondence had fallen, like a bomb-shell, into his calculations, and scattered them to the winds.

Mr. Bagby warmly approved the policy of the administration, in the late Oregon arbitration correspondence. But he was still opposed to the ten war steamers. He had no more idea now that there would be war, than he had ever entertained heretofore. He was satisfied there would be no war.

Mr. Allen challenged the Senator from N. C., to a resolution testing the sense of the Senate, on the policy of the administration in the Oregon negotiations.

Gen. Cass made another war speech, and a good

Gen. Cass made another war speech, and a good one—off hand, and to the point, and rather boasted that his grounds taken on the 15th December, were now confirmed.
Finally, on motion of Mr. J. M. Clayton, the Senate adjourned.
The crowd in the galleries of the Senate were merely the overflowings from the immense population in the commodious, but almost suffocated galleries of the House.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9-5 P.M. The House have just come out of Committee with an amendment to the Oregon notice, that the Oregon difficulties are still the subject of negotiation. The previous question has been moved and seconded. The House is all in termentation—galleries crowded all around; and the rotunda pretty well filled. Great day for the cake stand in the vestibule, and for John Foy, the Speaker of the lower House.
